Father Ignatine Cross-examined by a Cler-arman as to the Romish Tendencies of Monasticism-Lianthony Abbey Miracles. Why I am a Monk." Father Ignatius told yesterday afternoon to an audience which crowded the smaller hall of Cooper Union, in spite of an admission fee. More clergymen were present than usual, several being evidently Roman Oatholic priests. Father Ispatius interrupted the opening sentences of his addres to give the plano stool to an aged minister who was standing. The clergyman, being a large man, when he perched himself on the stool towered above the rest of the congregation almost as much as the other men who stood of whom there were many. The act of Father Ignatius proved to be of the nature of giving aid and confined to Christianity. They exist among the Buddhists, Brahmanists, and Mohammedans. .The monastic life has always and everywhere been revered as the highest form of human living. Not one in 10,000 can live it; no one can who has not received a call from God." After saying that the sixth and thirtieth chapters of Numbers and twenty-seventh of Levitious showed that there were religious communities in the Jewish Church, of which the Essenss were a type, he asked if there were not a monk in the New Testament-" One who was voluntarily poor, voluntarily virgin, and voluntarily obedient to a degree which brought Him to a shameful death on the cross?" He went on to intimate more than plainly that Christ lived the life of a monk in the years of which no history is given in the Bible. "We may be sure." he said "despite the solemn, mysterious vell which the Holy Ghost has flung over those years, that our Lord was working out our salvation by hourly and daily sacrifices. His life. as we know it, embodies the whole of Chris-

After saying that from the earliest ages of Christianity monasticism was part and parcel of Christian institutions, he spoke of its existence in the British Church before the arrival of the Pope's emissary, Augustine, and repeated the roll of saints furnished by the monks of Iona and Wales-St. Columba, St. David, &c. Speaking of the general Protestant impression that Henry VIII, procured the destruction of the monasteries in England because the monks were bad, he said, on the contrary, it was because they were good. He called to witness Prof. Mailtand, who has said: "The monks at all times were much better than the rest of the population." The stories about the immoralities of the monks of Henry VIII.'s time he declared roundly to be lies, and to illustrate how natural it is to lie about monks be told of a book recently published in England under the auspices of a Low Phurch elergyman, which contains preposterus and palpably false stories about Lianthony abbey. The book is written by a woman who was expelled from the nunnery. Among her essertions is one about two little girls being lashed on the bare liesh by the Mother Superior. The little girls have themselves denied the story. because the monks were bad, he said, on the

Henry VIII. disliked the monks (he constitued, after this digression) because they wouldn't acknowledge him as the head of the liburch falthough they had refused to acknowledge the Popel, or Anne Boleyn as his Duren. For hate of them and for love of their consersions—they held. Father Ignatius acknowledged cope-seventh of the soil of England—the King decreed their destruction. "but," continued Father Ignatius, "they held their land in trust for the British people. They were the atewards of the poor, and while the monasteries existed there was no need of workhouses and charity by act of Parliament." Fa her Ignatius did not deny that sometimes scandal was occasioned in a monastery by one who had mistaken his profession. "But," he arraned, "you don't suppress private houses because there is scandal in some, and what is sauce for the monastic goods should be sauce for the secular gander."

In conclusion, he saked his hearers to seclude themselves from the world haif an hour each week at least. When he had finished, he said he would answer any inquiries which those present were inclined to make.

"Is not monkery an unnatural life?" asked the old clergyman on the plano stool in deep, deliberate tones.

"Not so unnatural as supernatural. If Christian's life is alteresther unpartural. If Christian's life is alteresther unpartural.

"Is it not the testimony of history that a life separated from the chastening influence of the other sex tends to immorality?" asked the old minister in the same deep, deliberate tones.

"I have siready answered that in what I said about the monks of Henry VIII.'s time. Dean Mailland, you saw, bore me out."

"How about Froude?" asked somebody else.
Mr. Froude has been very well taken to task lately by scholars who have examined original authorities which have recently come to light. Besides, I never denied that there were individual instances of immorality."

"Don't you think that your course tends to educate people to a return to Homaniam?" came from the plane stool.

"I have airendy shown that monasticism is not confined to Romanism, and the Romana having a good thing is no reason why we shouldn't have it.

"Then you are trying to revive a Roman order?"

"Have you read the rule of St. Benedict?" asked Father ignatius in reply.

"I want an ansawer to my question. Won't this teaching tend to draw people to Rome?" Hefore Father Ignatius had time to answer. a diversion was effected by some one saking:

"Why do you mean by worship? If you mean that we give her the homage due to God, that is not true. We only give the reverence due to Jesus's mother, as His mother and for the love we bear Him. The lack of this reverence in Protestantism is driving people over to ligmanism."

It is answer to an indirect assertion that the Virgin mother was no more than any other woman. Father Ignatius exclaimed:

"If the Bleased Virgin be no more than other women, then her bon is no more than any other man."

no more questions. Father Ignatius pronounced the benediction and with a basket

No one could get out without passing him, and his basket soon held more money, to all appearance, than had been taken up at all the other

At the end of the service Father Ignatius again sat at the door of the hall, and his basket again garnered a harvest. Afterward he held a short reception, which terminated in his delivering a short personal exhortation to some ladies who remained.

Bliss moved that a day be fixed for the trial of De Lacy, or that the indictment be dismissed for lack of prosecution, more than two terms of court having passed since the indictment was filed. passed since the indictment was filed. It was understood that Col. Bilas's motion applied to the cases of Moloney and Denusey also. Assistant District Attorney Davis, who represented the people, said:

"Col. Fellows is not in court this morning, because he is till at home, confined to his bed. I saw him last evening in regard to this motion. He was very desirous of appearing here in person, but could not. Col. Fellows said that he had fully considered the subject, and had embodied in a written statement to the Court." Mr. Davis then read this:

"It is very apparent that I could do nothing respecting the trial of these causes in the short period remaining of my term. If they should ever be brought to trial months must necessarily slapse before a jury could be secured in any one of them. Before these defendants returned to the jurisdiction of this Court I was of the opinion that techaps, as to two of them, and certainly as to one, there was a good case for the people. Of course, no stems could be taken until they returned and surrendered themselves to the mandate of the Court. Since that took place I have examined with much care the various witnesses upon whom the people must rely for a successful prosecution of these cases could be sustained before a jury, even if a jury, under existing conditions, could be secured. The original and positive evidence for the people in these cases long ago became utterly worthless, and there was a manifest determination on the part of original witnesses to thwart the prosecution in its efforts to bring similar indictments to a successful issue. There is no corroborative evidence in the cases of De Laoy, Moloney, or Dempsey that would fortify the testimony of the so-called informers, even if that testimony was now reliable and efficient, as it is not. I do not believe it to be within the power of the istate to proceed to trial upon any of these indictments with even a taint hope of success, and my own judgment is that the derendants ought to have a trial, because the indictments h put Moloney, Dempsey, and De Lacy on trial.

Col. Fellows has been quite seriously ill with catarrh of the atomach for about a week and Alfred Howe Terry was born in Hartford on Nov. 10, 1827. He was educated in the public achools of New Haven and then entered the Yale Law School. He was admitted to the bar when but 21 years old, before he had been graduated from the law school. He scon took part in local politics, and was elected Clerk of the New Haven couris in 1854. The same sear he enlisted in the Second Regiment of the State militia and soon become commander. His term expired in 1860. In 1861 President Lincoln issued the call for volunteers, and the Second Connecticut militia responded with Terry as its Colonel. His regiment brought up the rear in the disastrous retreat from built Run, and did what it could in the way of retarding pursuit and saving Union property. At the end of three months his regiment was mustered out and he returned home to organize the Seventh Connecticut Volunteers which he led into the war. His terre was distinguished from the first. Brilliant service in a number of battles, clearness of judgment in council gave him the promotion to Bigadier-General of volunteers in February, 1862, and made him a brevet Major-General in 1864. He was then commander of the 1 irst Division of the Tenth Army Corose. His fame as a General will rest upon his overations against Fort Fisher, which overlooked the cea approaches to Wilmington, N. THE DUC PAUXY'S ARREST.

It Grows Out of a Dispute About 89,95 to His Hatel Bill. JUDGE COWING WON'T LET MOLONEY. Lyman Rhoades, the landlord of the Pavilion Hotel at New Brighton. S. The Duke, the Duchess, their three-year-old daughter, and the Duke's brother, the Count d'Auxy, were guests at the Pavil on Hotel un-til Nov. 25 last. The Duchess was the widow of Robert Soutter of this city. Mr. Rhoades, in explaining the arrest, said yesterday that on the day the party left the hotel the rent and board due amounted to $35,25, and the charge for extras to $3.95, making the whole bill $45,20. The Duke looked over the bill, and was preparing to pay for it, when he stopped, put his check book back in his pocket, and said, in a loud voice that it was

"I asked him." continued Mr. Rhoades. "what was the trouble, and he said that I was attempting to swindle him in charging $9.95 for extras. I tried to explain, but he would not let me. He drew a check for $35,25 and tossed it to me, saying that was all he owed. I then told him if he did not pay the rest would not allow his baggage to go. I had the two checks decosited in the Produce Exchange Bank the next day, but two days later I received word that payment on them had been stopped. I was very angry over the trick the Juke had played on me, and the next day sent for me, my clerk, with the dishonored checks to cail on the Duc d'auxy at the New York Hotel, whither he had gone, and demand an explanation. The only ayouse given by him was that the delay at the hotel had caused him extra expense for the transfer of his baggang. I hen applied to the Duchess, but she took her husband's part and told me that she engaged lawyers by the year and that if I wanted the money I could go to the court for it. I regarded this as an attempt to seare me, so instead of giving them achance to let the case drag along in the civil courfal got a warrant for his arrest from Justice W. W. Corbett of New Hrighton on a charge of endawvingt feloniously, to chean and defrault me out of goods and property to the amount of $45,20.

Negroes Looking for a Messiah. KANSAS CITY, Dec. 16.-Nearly all the low class of pegroes living along the leves streets in this city have been seized with a craze similar to the Messiah superstition. The ne similar to the Messiah superstition. The ne-groes have been led astray by a voudoo dector who came here from Bismarck, Dak. He pro-cialmed that he was the courier of the coming black Messiah, and that dances must be com-menced at once. Upon the night of his arrival a few darkies began their dance in a little cable on Cillis street, and on the following night the building would not hold the con-verts to the new faith.
